

Lauren Kelly

Lauren Kelly is a neurodiverse Irish conceptual visual artist who works both solo and within a socially engaged context. Her work is primarily within performance art and manifests into photography and film as an extension of performance, based around body politics and activism. She uses the unlimited nature of performance art to address the oppressed states of the body. Lauren's subject matters are intensely researched as she believes this roots the work historically, politically and personally.

Working closely with activists and others is an important part of her practice, as she believes that socially engaged work is the most crucial work within the arts sector; that social and political issues are key; and that art can give creative solutions to delivering the means for real social change.
